Social Influence Network Theory: A Sociological

Social influence network theory presents a mathematical formalization of the social process of attitude change as it unfolds in a social network of interpersonal influences. The theory is applied to lines of research in small group dynamics concerned with changes of group members' positions on an issue—including the formation of a consensus and of settled disagreement—via endogenous interpersonal influences, in which group members are responding to the displayed positions of others in ...

Social Network Theory Liu Major Reference Works

Social network theory produces an alternate view, where the attributes of individuals are less important than their relationships and ties with other actors within the network. This approach has turned out to be useful for explaining many real-world phenomena, but leaves less room for individual agency, the ability for individuals to influence their success, so much of it rests within the structure of their network.

Social Influence Theory IS Theory

Social influence comprises the ways in which individuals change their behavior to meet the demands of a social environment. It takes many forms and can be seen in conformity, socialization, peer pressure, obedience, leadership, persuasion, sales, and marketing. Typically social influence results from a specific action, command, or request, but people also alter their attitudes and behaviors in response to what they perceive others might do or think. In 1958, Harvard psychologist Herbert Kelman i
